Report on 'History for the Holidays' party

This was the '2nd Annual' holiday party, and it proved to be a very special occasion, thanks to the Nolls for their most generous hospitality and to Mary Jo Potter, and her committee, for superb planning!

The party was planned as a gift to members and volunteers as an opportunity to become better acquainted, with only a nominal fee for attendance. The liquid refreshments were all donated by members of the Board (with the elegant wine glasses provided by Mary Jo, herself), and the delicious 'feast' was catered by Carol Jean Fraase, who was most generous with her offerings.

The size of the Yates Mansion enabled a large group to attend and learn about the incredible restoration the Nolls have achieved. Pinky Noll had guides positioned in every room, downstairs and up to explain details of the work done there, and then gave a fascinating overview of the scope of the work herself.

If we are able to hold such occasions in the future, we may need to limit attendance to just volunteers, so be sure to answer any call to volunteer!

*THE SCHS & OAK RIDGE CEMETERY
"FAMILY HISTORY WRITING PROJECT"*

The Family History Writing Project came about as an upshot of the celebration of the 150th Anniversary of the founding of Oak Ridge Cemetery. It was thought that a project to commemorate the event could add meaning to the occasion. Cooperating on the project, the Sangamon County Historical Society and the Oak Ridge Cemetery Board of Managers decided on a Family History Writing Project for those who have any member of their families buried at Oak Ridge Cemetery.

This is probably one of the most publicized projects that the SCHS has ever done. A prospectus on the project was first handed out to those attending the Oak Ridge Cemetery 150th Anniversary Picnic and the 10th Annual Cemetery Walk. Ads were later placed in the State Journal-Register and the Illinois Times, with news reports in The Writers Block, two issues of Senior News & Times for Illinois and in three issues of Historico, as well as two spaced announcements in The State Journal-Register. Postings in some office bulletin boards were also made. The final charge was by personal solicitations with follow-up telephone calls by some members. Very slowly but surely, the effort finally paid off as the reports started to trickle in after two exten-

Report on the January program

Gary Vitale chronicled the early years of James Colin Brewster, a charismatic Mormon prophet, who went by the name of Colin Brewster, and who strove to first hold Mormon beliefs to its origins by publishing the books of 'Esdras' as revealed to him in visions and then holding together the splintering groups of the church after the death of Joseph Smith. Gary paralleled the efforts of Lincoln to build unity in the Whig party at the same time to Brewster's efforts; both utilizing the 'house divided' theme in their efforts to unify. Lincoln was successful. Brewster was not, and in 1850 Brewster led a splinter group to a promised land in California, stopping in New Mexico on the way. One family, the Oatmans, continued on, only to be massacred and/or taken hostage by hostile Indians, which effectively killed the 'Brewsterite' sect, and Colin Brewster seemed to disappear from the earth.

After extensive research, Gary discovered what happened to Brewster after the Oatman massacre, which led to a fascinating reconstruction of the life of the former prophet. He had returned to Illinois after his failed settlement effort and, after a few years as both a farm laborer and teacher, joined the 33rd Illinois Volunteer Infantry, Company K, the famous "Teacher's Brigade" together with his younger brother, Orlando. James became ill, but was forced to keep marching to Arkansas, where he was hospitalized. Later discharged due to debilitating illness, he returned to his family in Illinois, only to reenlist later in an 'Invalid Corps'. After the war he tried farming, teaching and other jobs that proved too much for him due to his disability, and he applied for a disability pension in 1880. It was through the 14 affidavits required to prove his disability that Gary was able to reconstruct some 40 years of his movements from one end of the Mississippi to the other until his death in 1909 at the age of 82.

In conclusion Gary pointed out that James Colin Brewster had really lived two separate lives; as the Mormon boy wonder, Colin Brewster, and then as the vulnerable Civil War veteran, James Brewster.

Gary should also be congratulated for his fortitude in carrying on in the face of the major tech breakdown of his very extensive visual presentation. Fortunately his script carried the story, but the loss of the visual portion was most unfortunate.

sions of the deadline that will end by the time you, the members, receive this issue of Historico.

As of the time of this writing we have received 22 reports from 19 people with around 8 more that are expected to come. Among those submitted, four came from out of state, two from other counties in Illinois, three from Sangamon County outside Springfield and the remaining 13 from Springfield residents. With the original goal of receiving at least 25 submissions, we can say that the project is coming along well.

So far, the reports that have been received tell very interesting stories, often inter-related, with historical tidbits that are not well known. From them, one can easily sense the history of Springfield and Sangamon County. It is hoped that this collection of family histories will become an important publication of the Society.

The President's Corner

To say that the History for the Holidays event at the Yates Mansion in late December was a special occasion might be an understatement. Nothing short of the word superb suffices for the evening that members of the Society were fortunate to spend in a truly magnificent setting.

The evening was made possible by the gracious hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Jon Gray Noll, the current owners of the restored home in Springfield. Mrs. Noll, known to friends as Pinky, headed the private restoration project—undertaken in 1988, the year of the mansion's dedication to the Register of Historic Places of the United States Department of Interior. Mrs. Noll worked with Mary Jo Potter, head of a special Society committee on the event, to make the evening possible.

The mansion, an example of Romanesque architecture with touches of the late Victorian, was built in or by Washington Park in the early 1900s by the state's second Governor Richard Yates, who served one term in office from 1901 to 1905. His father, the first Richard Yates, was Illinois governor during the Civil War. The second Governor Yates, who died in 1936, lived in the mansion until 1928. After a number of other owners came and went through the years, the Nolls bought the home in 1987.

A highlight of the December gathering was Mrs. Noll's enlightening discussion of the challenges encountered in restoring the home. Prior to the start of actual work on the project, significant research was conducted through contact with family members of previous owners, review of historical documents and other research. At all times, the restoration process was in keeping with original building designs of the Yates family, the home's well-known architect (George Helmle of Springfield) and the builder, James Culver. Strictly speaking, the Nolls did not attempt to duplicate the Yates home. Instead, they restored the structure to its period authenticity.

One of the many fascinating aspects of the renovation was the restoration of a major focal point of the home, a large cobble stoned fireplace serving as a backdrop to an elevated, first-floor landing. The undertaking included the restoration of two cannonballs originally in the fireplace. These were gifts to the first Governor Yates. According to the best available information, the cannonballs were from the Civil War's Chattanooga battlefield. Legend had it that a person touching both cannonballs at the same time and making a wish would find the wish granted.

More than one member of the Society moved to determine if the legend of the cannonballs was true. Only time will tell if their wishes were met.

John Trutter, the Society's first president, recently sent a copy of this photo of the anniversary banquet for the "Long Nine" held in February, 1961. It was attended by 500 people, including Governor Kerner, Mayor Collins and Dr. Paul Angle. 8 of the 'Long Nine' impersonators are seated at the table in front. How many can you identify?
